CalmUnity Did you know, web searches for "how to slow down" and "reduce stress" reached an all-time high in the U.S in 2023? Like most of us, you may be looking for simple solutions to these common issues. The good news is there are simple and effective techniques to improve memory and focus, decrease inflammation, and restore restful sleep at the same time. Join our community of calm-seekers as we explore body-based practices for decreasing stress and improving wellbeing.

Instructor: Classes are led by James Crader, an embodied behavior practitioner and educator who specializes in the fields of embodiment, attention, and resilience. With a curated background in communications sciences, moving somatic experience, stress and trauma work, and organizational change and leadership coaching, Crader creates a unique body-centered experience and engages in conversation around topics that range from personal wellness to systemic change.
